Scores going up, not down

Seniors above norm on tests

While recent national news articles have alleged American high school seniors are scoring increasingly lower scores on standardized college entrance exams, Canyon High School students are not only scoring consistently above the national norm but are increasing scores every year.

That's what a comparison compiled last week by Mrs. Ruth Holladay, secondary curriculum coordinator, indicates.

"It's kind of rewarding and pleasing," Mrs. Holladay said after releasing the figures.

Her figures compare the scores of CHS seniors with national norm scores for the Scholastic Achievement Test and the American College Testing test, both nationally- administered and recognized college entrance examinations. The figures compare scores for the four school years beginning in 1970-71.

Results on the ACT test show the following, comparing national and local average scores beginning with the 1970-71 school year:

National	Local
18.9	20.5
18.8	20.8
18.9	22.9
18.7	21.9

Results on the SAT test show the following, comparing national and local average scores beginning with the 1970-71 school year:

VERBAL
National	Local
454	482
450	532
443	486
440	508
MATH
National	Local
487	527
482	570
481	537
478	541

Even though the scores seem to indicate Canyon seniors do consistently better on the entrance exams than do other seniors in the nation, Mrs. Holladay cautions that there are many variables in the figures which must be given some weight.

"Many of the kids going off to school don't take the ACT or SAT test until they get to that school," she said. "They take it at college."

Thus, those test scores would not be available to fill in the CHS average.

In addition, she said, non-college-bound students sometimes take the tests and the average is lowered substantially.

Nevertheless, Mrs. Holladay said it is possible the same variables are at work in all other schools over the nation where the two tests are administered.

Students sign up individually to take the two tests, one of which is required by most colleges for entrance. The ACT test is administered annually on a national basis, but in the Panhandle it is administered at Amarillo College.

The SAT is also a nationally-administered test with West Texas State University officials administering it locally.

The test scores and comparisons with national averages will be given Canyon school board members Tuesday night at their regular meeting.

Dr. Dudley Moore, school board member, had asked Mrs. Holladay to compile the statistics after reading several articles in the news media concerning the lower scores being made on the tests nationally.

N.Y. fiscal woe won't hurt here

Even if New York City should default on its debt payments, anticipated local county and school district bond issue programs should be unaffected, an area financial expert said this week.

Bob Davis, financial advisor to Randall County commissioners and Canyon School Board members, said the interest rates which will be charged both entities for bonding programs this fall while unpredictable, should not be affected by the fiscal plight of the nation's largest city.

"New York will have no impact at all," Davis said. "It will not affect these bonds at all, even if they default."

Davis said New York's situation may have an impact on municipal bonds held by large investors, but that Texas bonds are a different issue altogether.

He said he's "not worried" about obtaining a competitive interest rate for bonds which the Canyon school board hopes to issue if authorized by a citizens election in early December, or for bonds to be issued later this month or early next month to pay off certificates of obligation issued by Randall County commissioners for construction of a new South Amarillo courthouse annex.

Interest rates for those bonds, if the pay-out period is about 10 years, he said, will be around 6 per cent. The rate is much higher, near the 8 per cent mark, for bonds with a pay-out period of as long as 20 years, he said.

"I think we will come out real good," Davis said of the local situations.

Davis has worked up tentative proposals for a $4.5 million bond issue for the school district to finance construction of two new schools. Under the proposed schedule, the funds needed to service bonded indebtedness for the school district would increase by more than 100 per cent for the issue, depending on the pay-out period for the bonds.

No such schedule has yet been worked out for the county, which must pay off between $500,000 and $600,000 in certificates of obligation used to finance construction of the new South Amarillo courthouse annex.

He indicated, however, he will urge county commissioners to opt for a short 10-year pay-out period for a lower interest rate.

Construction of the new annex has virtually been completed and commissioners are expected to make a final payment on the project out of their own funds.

OUCH — Curiosity may kill the cat, and it's not too healthy for cows either. Several cows on the Fred Begert farm got a face full of quills this week when they apparently investigated a visiting porcupine. Begert said he had never had any similar problems before and did not know where the porcupines came from. With the help of a neighbor Friday, he penned the cattle and pulled a hundred or more quills from the noses and legs of the cows.

No comment from locals on Todd PRPC lawsuit

Local officials had no comment Friday on a civil suit filed Thursday by a West Texas State University violinist asking that the Panhandle Regional Planning Commission be declared unconstitutional.

Dr. Donald Todd, a music faculty member at WTSU and long-time opponent of the PRPC, filed the suit Thursday in 47th District Court, asking Judge Bryan Poff to stop the payment of tax funds to the planning group.

Todd filed the suit "as a class," but was joined as plaintiff by sixteen other Panhandle area residents, including one Canyon man.

Todd, who has spoken before county commissions throughout the state against what he calls "regional government," alleges in the petition that the use of tax funds for support of the PRPC is "unauthorized and illegal," and that consolidation of functions of government in Texas requires approval of a majority of the voters in each political subdivision. The PRPC, Todd contends, has been operating without voter approval.

George Loudder, a former Canyon city manager and now executive director of the PRPC, declined to comment on the suit Friday morning.

He said, though, that he would meet with the PRPC board of directors this week to discuss the case and might have comment following that meeting.

Glen Metcalf, city manager of Canyon, had no comment on the suit, either.

County Judge Woody Pond was out of town Friday and could not be reached for comment.

The City of Canyon and Randall County are listed as defendants in the suit, along with the PRPC, Loudder, the City of Amarillo, Potter County, Parmer County, the City of Farwell, Wheeler County, the City of Shamrock, Gray County, the City of Pampa, Deaf Smith County, the City of Perryton, the City of Spearman and the City of Borger.

The regional planning commission, which is headquartered in Amarillo, was begun in 1969 when elected officials from Canyon, Randall County, Amarillo and Potter County voted to form the council during a meeting in the Randall County

Cites pending decisions

WT council urges Dolph to name regents

The West Texas State University faculty council will call on Gov. Dolph Briscoe to use "all deliberate speed" in appointing new members to the university board of regents, if the WTSU president approves the letter.

Council members did not take a formal vote on whether to send a letter authored by Dr. Joe Nelson, but indicated their approval that Council Chairman Dr. Walter Shelly receive approval of the letter from President Lloyd I. Watkins before mailing.

"Several matters demanding immediate attention are being neglected because the current board feels that it should not make any significant decisions until the new appointments have been made," the letter says. "Your immediate attention to this problem would be greatly appreciated."

Nelson told other faculty council members such matters as an insurance program for the faculty were being left without action until the governor appoints men to serve on the board to fill expired terms.

Briscoe is now considering appointments to fill the expired terms of Cloyce Box, board chairman, B. Raymond Evans, vice chairman of the board, and Jack Shelton.

Regents have set Oct. 27 as time for their next meeting. They indicated at an emergency session a week ago that the new faculty insurance program will be on the agenda for the meeting.

The letter to Briscoe was the least controversial action taken by the council during their regular Friday session.

They spent more than two hours discussing, and at times, arguing, about proposals for action on the university-wide promotion and tenure committee, a committee of some controversy since last spring.

The council members voted unanimously to form a three-member subcommittee to study faculty complaints about the current method of determining promotions and tenure, and to recommend improvements or replacements for the current system.

Ronnie Waide, John Reeves and Jim Woodyard were named to the committee.

The subcommittee's work is to be completed by Nov. 7 and recommendations are to be turned over to the council for con-

Stork could set record as births increase here

The stork could have a record year in Canyon for 1975.

If the rate of births at Palo Duro Hospital here continues the next 2½ months as it has during the last nine months, Administrator Ray Grimes says as many as 222 to 225 babies will have been born here during the year.

August, September and October have been peak months this year, he said, at the hospital for deliveries. Twenty-seven babies were delivered during August, 23 in September and Grimes is predicting as many as 30 will be delivered this month.

If 1975 doesn't prove to be a record year for births, Grimes predicts the three-month period ending Nov. 1 could well be the quarter with the largest birth rate.

So far this year, the hospital staff has delivered 177 babies. In all of 1974, only 180 babies were delivered.

Records in city hall indicate 1973 was a record year for births with 215 babies born in Neblett Memorial Hospital. The birth rate in 1972 approached the 200 mark.

Grimes is at a loss to explain exactly why the birth rate in Canyon is increasing, but he says the fact that Palo Duro Hospital room rates are lower than rates in Amarillo hospitals may be significant.

Decision on Mrs. Strain delayed

A disappointed Marguerite Strain learned Friday the federal Department of Justice has delayed for at least three months a decision on whether retirement systems discriminate against women.

Squire Padgett, an attorney in the civil rights division of the U.S. Dept. of Justice, told The News a decision on the issue has been postponed until more information can be gathered. He said it would be three months at least before a decision would be reached. The decision had been due Wednesday.

The justice department has been asked by President Ford to make a determination on whether retirement systems such as the Texas Municipal Retirement System discriminates against women on their payment tables.

Mrs. Strain, who turned 66 on Oct. 7, has fought the Texas retirement system for municipal employees since 1972, when she learned she would have to work five years past the age of 65 to receive the same benefits from the system a man of age 65 receives.

She has delayed the filing of a federal lawsuit in the matter pending a clarification or ruling from Padgett's office in Washington.

Initially, Padgett indicated his office might help Mrs. Strain in a civil suit against the TMRS. The Texas American Civil Liberties Union has also offered aid to Mrs. Strain.

She formally complained two years ago to the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, which ruled a year later that the TMRS did, in fact, discriminate against women in paying retirement benefits.

But, rather than negotiate a settlement, the TMRS invited a lawsuit over the issue.

Strengthened coordinating board doesn't worry WTSU officials

Action by the state legislature strengthening the power of the state-wide college coordinating board may have big-school officials red-faced and angry, but for West Texas State University officials, never benefitted by the mammoth funds available to larger schools, the move is an inevitable manifestation of the quest for accountability.

Local administrators don't feel threatened by the new legislation passed last spring which gives the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System a broader range of powers over the activities of individual schools.

Nor do they feel any more controlled or directed than they have in the past.

While apparently only an under current of opposition now, educators at major Texas institutions are expected to openly fight the coordinating board in its new-found power.

The Chronicle of Higher Education reports in its current issue that the fight may center on the permanent university fund, which provides millions of dollars annually exclusively to the University of Texas system and the Texas A&M System.

The newspaper reports that UT regents fought vigorously in the last session of the legislature to defeat a Senate bill which gives the Coordinating Board the power to approve or disapprove new building construction on campuses. The fight, the paper says, continues and could go into the courts.

For WTSU officials, who are not endowed by the constitutionally-mandated funds, the strengthening of the coordinating board will probably mean only more paperwork.

The bill finally passed by the legislature last spring not only gives the coordinating board power to approve new building construction, but also broadens the board's power in approving new course and instructional offerings.

"The board shall make recommendations to the legislature with respect to maximum enrollment limits for each public institution of higher education in the State of Texas and may recommend to the legislature maximum enrollment limits for any department, school, degree program, or certificate program at any such institution," the bill says.

The Chronicle for Higher Education reports that in the original version, the bill stated that the board would have the authority to set those limits itself. But, says the paper, UT regents lobbied for the watered-down version.

The board's grip on curriculum was tightened in the measure with the stipulation that once a new degree or certificate program is approved, no additions to the course material can be added without board approval also.

The strengthening of the coordinating board "doesn't really bother me a great deal," says Dr. Lloyd I. Watkins, WTSU president.

"It might be a good thing if people took a look at what we're doing," he said.

Watkins, who has headed a school for three years which has not in its history over-built to accommodate student numbers, said the coordinating board is being strengthened because legislators are reacting to a proliferation of new schools, new buildings and new courses in an era when college enrollments are declining.

"In the past there may have been excessive proliferation of institutions of higher education in America," Watkins said. "And, I think there have been instances where off-campus courses have been offered in the backyards of institutions which are prepared to offer the same thing."

Watkins said his feelings about the new power of the coordinating board are tempered "because I do have substantial confidence in the people on the staff of the board.

"We've been treated very fairly and I don't fear the imposition of standards of accountability on what we're doing," he said.

Suit against PRPC a welcome move

Panhandle Regional Planning Commission officials, local government officials and others concerned about the operation of government must certainly welcome the lawsuit filed Thursday by Dr. Donald Todd.

Todd, whose efforts at legal and governmental research produce some strange results on occasion, will finally be called on to present concrete, valid evidence to substantiate his long-standing charge that the PRPC is the product of a conniving, communist-oriented multi-national conspiracy of millionaires.

For several years now, the WTSU violinist has stumped the Plains and other portions of the state charging, among other things, that county and city commissioners who condone and participate in regional planning commission are fellow-travelers.

A self-appointed crusader for the American Way as he defines it, Todd will be forced during the trial he wants to refrain from innuendo, from name-calling, and from other scare tactics, and state, for the record and under oath, what his complaints are all about.

The trial, we feel, will be healthy, because for once and for all, the innuendo, the shrouded charges of Todd and his followers will be brought into the open for full public scrutiny.

Likewise, PRPC Director George Loudder and those who believe that planning for the future is not a communist conspiracy but simply good business will have the opportunity to tell what the PRPC has done for this region, and what it has done is substantial, and what it has not done.

Public scrutiny cannot hurt the PRPC. But, it could embarrass Don Todd. — C.W.

A new twist on the favorite sport

Assume, for openers, that football will remain the great American fetish at least until rollerball is perfected.

Assume, too, that football has some legitimate, or at least functional connection with a college campus, that connection being — and these are the links heard most often from university officials when asked to justify football expenditures — basically, three-fold: To promote a positive image of the university with a regionally, if not nationally, known team or individuals; to create on the campus itself a kind of undefinable spirit, a loosely conveyed esprit des corps; and to satisfy the cravings of more traditional-minded alumni who assess the value of the institution, and thus their monetary contributions, on the basis of success of the most common and most widely-recognized aspect of the university.

Argument from these assumptions, then, would lead to some interesting conclusions if the argument is centered on the West Texas State University Buffaloes of Coach Gene Mayfield.

For whatever reasons, and they're not pertinent to this discussion, the Buffs have blown it so far this season. The Buffs are having trouble, they had trouble last year and in years past and they face more trouble in the future.

The football program at WTSU has failed to fully legitimate itself on the campus, if the above-outlined assumptions are true, because the program has failed to promote a positive image of the university in the region (the reverse of the assumption being, of course, that if a winning team promotes a positive image, a losing team promotes a negative image), has failed to ignite campus-wide interest even if it could do so with a campus community which is numerically made up of vast numbers of commuters, night students and others who participate in campus affairs only peripherally, and has failed to rally overwhelming support from alumni, many of whom grumble these days about making 1975 their last year in hard-backed seats at Kimbrough Stadium.

Continuing on the negative aspects, the football program requires not only alumni support, but also calls on student fees to the tune of several thousand dollars each year, fees which without football might either be pocketed by the students or channel led into scholarship or other incentive programs for students deserving of academic honors or students who might otherwise fail to attend college.

The program, even with the input from student fees, could find itself in financial trouble in a few years due to ever-rising costs for equipment and travel and salaries. Budget allocations for football were cut this year at the university.

What, then, to do about football at West Texas State?

One alternative, of course, would be to remove football entirely from the campus. Being tradition-bound alumni ourselves, we wouldn't particularly advocate this route.

Another alternative would be to simply de-emphasize football to the extent that it becomes more an intramural-type activity, requiring fewer funds and no student financing.

But, a friend and long-time WTSU football fan has come up with what could be an ideal proposal, one which would allow students to keep their money, which would promote the image of the university on a much wider scale, which could well spark alumni enthusiasm. Admittedly, the plan might not provide the kind of esprit des corps administrators like to see on the campus, but not even the 1967 moratoriums were able to do that.

Our friend proposes that the university remain involved in football, but do so without a football team.

His proposal: That the university endow a West Texas State University Honorary Professorship in Small Group Interaction with the starting quarterback of the Dallas Cowboys to receive the title and accoutrements of the rank.

During the Cowboy's season, the quarterback, our friend proposes, would carry the title and fans throughout the nation could hear West Texas State's name and of its ingenuity innumerable times.

Our friend talks glowingly of imagining the voice of play-by-play artist Frank Reynolds: "The ball is snapped and West Texas State University Honorary Professor of Small Group Interaction Roger Staubach is back to pass."

During the off-season, says the friend, the quarterback could come to campus for a couple of guest appearances in classes and on local television, enhancing even more his and the university's image.

With the professorship, moreover, would go the requirement that the quarterback make recruitment ads and television spots boosting the university rather than aftershave and deodorant.

The Dallas Cowboys would be the logical team to receive the endowment, the friend avers, because it is the Cowboys who have captured the interest of the Panhandle and the state. Win or lose, the Cowboys are watched. Hated or loved, at least, he says, the Cowboys are not ignored.

Those alums inclined to base the university's worth on won-loss record of the institution would find advantages to such a proposal, as would the university itself in alum relations. Those alums who recognize the true worth of the institution would support the university even if Dallas were beaten by Washington.

Those of the other ilk could manifest their revenge not on the university, but on the Cowboys' quarterback, a chap whose skin is remarkably thick already.

Because the university would not choose the Cowboy quarterback, but would simply endow the leader chosen by the team management and pay his salary through the endowment, administrative officials could declare themselves innocent and uninvolved when approached on Tuesday morning about lousy play of the professor.

More importantly, student money would not be used, under my friend's proposal, to endow the professorship. Those students, those supporters, those alumni who thought it worthwhile could put up the money and all the money to pay for the endowment. Those not wishing to participate would not be required to donate.

If put into effect, our friend's plan could set a precedent of national scope.

If academia is to be involved in football, after all, it should be involved in a big way. — C.W.

The elusive value we've lost

By CARROLL WILSON

The West Texas State University library is new. I mean, it's brand spanking new.

Go in the front door and the carpet feels good underfoot, the place is roomy, airy, bright. It's a nice place to be. A comfortable place, a place where you can sit and think, or study, or just sit.

Then, go up those stairs just at the entrance and when you reach the second floor take a quick left and go in the second door on the left.

That's the men's bathroom. The first thing that strikes you when you go into the bathroom through double doors is the wallpaper.

It's pretty wallpaper, alright, and probably some interior design artist somewhere in the East or the West spent hours coming up with the design, understanding that it's the kind of wallpaper which adds a cheerful spirit even to the restroom.

But, there's something wrong with it. The designer, I think, would go berzerk if he saw it.

Because while it's fairly pretty, the thing is done wrong. The designer obviously meant for the wallpaper to be hung right, correctly, and with the design consistent, the design being a kind of thin-lined plaid.

But, some worker, undoubtedly in a hurry, put up these sheets of wallpaper without even worrying about whether the pattern matches all the way across the wall.

So what you see is a plaid design meant to be one consistent pattern across the wall but which is off, just enough to make you uncomfortable.

Or, take this typewriter. It's an old, black one, made probably in 1927 by Royal. Its guts are all exposed and you can even watch the innards work by peering through little bevelled glass openings in its sides.

It's a great typewriter. I can type fast and forever on it, its action is so smooth.

It sat in the county auditor's office for who knows how many years before I bought it for seven bucks two months ago at a county auction and it still works like it's brand new.

The keys go up and come down correctly. It's a precision instrument. It makes my job easier because some worker 50 years ago didn't decide to flake off on his job the day he made my typewriter.

Or take Mexican food. I love Mexican food, but I don't like to eat cardboard and ground sponge. I can get Mexican food that tastes like that at a place in Amarillo for a little over a buck.

Or, I can go to a place in Tulia and get Mexican food that wants to be eaten slowly, that alternately scalds and excites the taste buds, for a lot more.

Or take cars. Marshall down on the square is a conniseuer of old cars, Model Ts and Model As and others of that vintage.

They made cars to last a lifetime back then, back when fewer cars were made and labor unions and high wages and management profits were tied to quality products.

Today, they make cars to last three years, maybe. You gotta keep buying cars to keep Detroit moving and, you know, what's good for General Motors is good for the U.S.A.

What I'm talking about, of course, is quality. You almost can't get it anymore in anything.

But, before I fall into the rationalist's trap of never defining that which I discuss, let me go to a relatively new book by Robert M. Pirsig called "Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Maintenance," and let Pirsig speak for me.

"Quality . . ." he writes, "you know what it is, yet you don't know what it is. But, that's self-contradictory. But some things are better than others, that is, they have more quality. But when you try to say what the quality is, apart from the things that have it, it all goes poof! There's nothing to talk about. But if you can't say what Quality is, how do you know what it is, or how do you know that it even exists? If no one knows what it is, then for all practical purposes it doesn't exist at all. But for all practical purposes it really does exist. What else are grades based on? Why else would people pay fortunes for some things and throw others in the trash pile? Obviously some things are better than others . . . but what's the betterness? So round and round you go, spinning mental wheels and no where finding anyplace to get traction. What the hell is quality? What is it?"

Pirsig decides for himself what quality is, and I would buy at least one thing he says in describing it, when he says that somewhere along the way quality and reason were in conflict and reason became supreme and quality subordinated.

Thus, man opts for that which is reasonable because it is based on reason, even if the thing he does isn't any good.

In the modern technological day, he says, the worker, the producer, has become apart from his work, that which he produces. He no longer identifies with his production, he does not identify with the folks he produces for. He identifies with only himself.

Quality, I would say, cannot be a product of modern America for several reasons.

Increased wages are tied to increased production (at least in some businesses) and increased production implies a decrease in time, in care that it takes to produce a unit product.

The worker, in pursuit of faster production, decreases his interest in the product and switches his emphasis to the money the product represents to him in time spent.

Capitalism demands a continual expansion of production if babies turned workers are to have jobs, if the country is to continue rolling.

Quality in a product or in a job is virtually impossible to attain.

Even in the arts, where ideally the artist should have quality as an uppermost concern, the trend in modern times has been the mass production of art objects, the idea being to make money off those things which are considered, because of the mode of production, to be quality products.

Quality in the arts, then, is a joke. As Tom Wolfe notes in a recent Harpers article, art itself has become a gigantic rip-off, a mindless attempt to profit.

Before I'm accused of spouting Marxist ideas, though, let me point out that as Marx saw it, capitalism would be doomed because the worker, viewing the product as a part of himself — identifying with the product — would become alienated by the exploitation of the capitalist, who desired to make a profit from the worker's own product and rise up in rebellion.

Capitalism, Marx indicated, would be killed by the workers because the workers would be concerned about quality while the capitalists were not.

Thus, if as I have stated, the American worker no longer emphasizes or identifies with his product, Marx is all wet. He's wrong, his idea killed by an internal fallacy.

So what, you ask. So what if we don't have quality products any more? I mean, we're making it anyway aren't we? We're doing alright.

My response is this: I can't really tell you why it hacks me off to see the wallpaper in the library bathroom botched. I can't tell you why new cars make me mad. I can't tell you why it makes me boil to see the county pay a high fee to IBM for a maintenance contract to ensure their damn machines work for more than a year.

I sense the loss of something spiritual, not something concrete. I sense the loss of something which cannot be explained in our rationalist system.

I sense the loss but I honestly don't know how to go about retrieving that which is gone.

Our World

The most neglected career

By ANN BROWN

The most rewarding and probably the most neglected career in America is homemaking.

With 1 out of 3 homes breaking up, and the ratio rising rapidly, it is obvious that too many Americans are neglecting the most important work of all.

If 1 out of every 3 houses were to fall in, it would create a furor in the housing industry. Yet the loss of a house is nothing compared to the loss of a home.

When a house burns, and all the family escapes safely, they can build another house or do without it.

But when a member of the family perishes in the fire, the loss can never be recovered.

If there is no home in your house, it may not be the fault of anyone currently living there.

Children who grow up in one-parent homes have no pattern to follow in the marriage relationship. And it is not a lesson to be learned in a few sessions.

A fatherless boy has no opportunity to observe how a man should treat his wife and children. And a poor example can be worse than none.

Any girl who grows up in a home where "father" is only a dirty word is almost certain to regard her husband with fear and suspicion.

There is probably no quicker way to destroy a man's self respect and self confidence than for his wife to distrust him.

Perhaps the most essential of many requirements for a happy home is a sense of humor.

The husband or wife who must weight every word before it is uttered lest the mate take offense may eventually begin looking for more comfortable surroundings.

It is one thing to be deliberately offensive, and something else entirely to be constantly misunderstood.

Few people can do two things at one time and do them well. Far too many homemakers are trying to hold down two jobs: Make a home and earn a paycheck. An exhausted wife and mother is seldom a good one.

If somebody in the home has to hold down two jobs, it is sometimes better if the man of the house does it.

A happy home is essential to emotional health. And creating a happy home requires a lot of work and sacrifice.

A comfortable home, however, is a labor of love that makes all other work worthwhile.

But if one's home is a place of constant tension or turmoil, it is difficult to maintain sufficient self confidence to be productive in any profession.

Few dependable men who willingly assume the responsibilities of marriage are interested in running after other women.

Many good men, however, who are forced to flee from lazy, contentious, or disagreeable wives, are caught by other women.

Any wife who has reason to fear there is another woman in the picture needs to learn whether her husband is running away from his home or to the other woman.

And asking the errant husband is not always the best way to find out; it's quite possible he doesn't know.

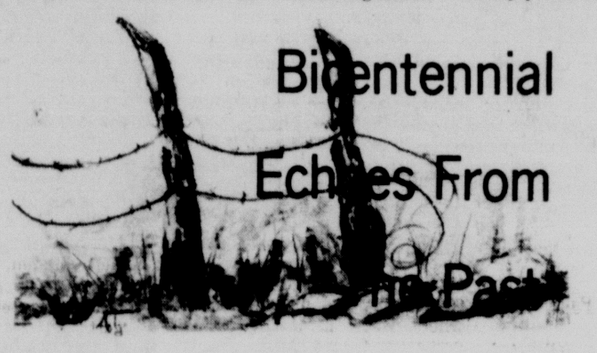
When the home is clean, comfortable, and cheerful, adults and little children can usually think of few places they had rather be.

When the teenager develops the nesting instinct, however, he may not find the family home attractive regardless of its assets. But children who are reared in happy homes will likely try to duplicate them in their own.

It also works in the reverse: The battered child usually becomes a battering parent.

Whatever kind of home we provide for our children, they will probably provide the same for theirs.

Do you want your grandchildren to grow up in the kind of home you have?



Bicentennial Echoes From The Past

By JOHN L. MATTHEWS

In 1925 I moved up to some repossessed land that had been part of the old XIT Ranch. There were old timers there, men who had come in and hunted the buffalo. One of my neighbors had come to this country as a boy from down the Fort Worth and Denver Railroad. He came to Goodnight, Tex., and worked for the old Colonel.

Colonel Goodnight took a liking to this boy, Bob Blair, and told him a lot of stories which Bob repeated to me. Dust bowl days and other days, we didn't have any television or radio so the stories would go from mouth to mouth; there was nothing else to do.

Bob Blair was a peculiar fellow — had a memory like a burro. He was slow about talking and pretty emphatic about what he said. He told this story about an earlier day:

The cowboys, especially in the winter time, didn't work the ranges and stayed in the ranch house. Two of them, well liked by the other cowboys, had a quarrel, there was gun play, so the Colonel decided to move one of the cowboys to a line camp thirty or forty miles toward Mobeetie so they wouldn't shoot each other.

The winter came with heavy snows. They got through the winter alright, but they ran out of tobacco and salt. Of all things, they had plenty of buffalo and cow beef but no salt and no smoking tobacco. They rocked along and ate that beef without any salt. There was no round up and no work to do 'til spring. The cattle had all been herded into the breaks. The freight wagons had gone three hundred miles south into Gainesville for supplies.

Along in the spring the grass was coming. A man rode in one evening and said, "The wagons are about twenty miles out and will be in town tomorrow or the next day." These wagons were pulled by oxen and could make only ten or twelve miles a day. The next morning the cowboys were so hungry for this salt and tobacco they just saddled up and rode out to meet the freight wagons. Several miles out they loped over the hill, and there the wagons were. They raised a war whoop and charged down. The first thing they did was jump on the wagons containing the salt, knock the head out of a barrel and began passing out salt. One old boy had a hatchet, chopping chunks of it loose. Every fellow was starving for salt.

They stood around licking this salt. Suddenly, they heard a war whoop and here came another bunch of men who had gotten wind of it. They wanted some tobacco and salt, so they charged down. The men on the wagon began to hand out salt to this new bunch.

One of the fellows handed a chunk of salt to a cowboy, said, "You!" for this was the man he was supposed to shoot on sight. He just handed him a chunk of salt, but put his hand on his gun. The old boy eyeballed him and went ahead licking the salt. Everything passed off; they shook hands and everything was lovely. So far as I know, they lived to a ripe old age and never ran out of salt again.

Official Due WT Talk

Dr. Leo E. Manzer from the Central Research and Development Department of E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company will present a talk at West Texas State University Oct. 20 beginning at 3:30 p.m.

Entitled "Reactivity, Calorimetry and NMR Spectroscopic Studies of Methyl-Platinum Cations," the talk will be delivered in Room 102 of the Science Center.

Dr. Manzer received his doctorate at the University of Western Ontario under Dr. Howard Clark, and his research field is in organo-platinum compounds.

He will discuss the synthesis of the wide variety of compounds involving a platinum group to which a methyl group is bonded, and look at the implications of the spectra of these compounds to their chemistry.

Dr. Manzer was invited to the WT campus by Dr. Joel Oliver, WTSU assistant professor of chemistry, who describes him as "an exciting and prolific fellow."

The lecture is open to the public, with a special invitation extended to chemistry students.

"I think chemistry students will get some insight as to what chemistry is like outside the classroom," Oliver said.

Nurses Due At Clinic

Three West Texas State University senior nursing students will travel to Redford, Texas, Oct. 23-25 to work in an out-patient clinic, sponsored by the First Baptist Church of Amarillo.

Mary Ellen Peace, Sierra Blanca; Ruth Barnard, Wichita Falls; and Maria Galvan, San Benito; will be accompanied by Edna Garza, assistant professor of nursing, and Dr. Edwin Low, Neblett Clinic of Canyon.

As partial fulfillment of the special topics nursing course requirements, the three students will actually work with over 100 patients daily.

The patients, Mexican nationals who come across the border for medical care, will include both children and adults with a variety of illnesses, Miss Garza explained.

"We hope to do some nutrition teaching, also. We want to teach them about diets and using foods available in their areas," she said.

Hanson Named To Position

Dr. James A. Hanson, director of the Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum, was elected the secretary-treasurer of the Mountain Plains Museum Conference during their annual conference in El Paso earlier this month.

The conference serves more than 100 museums in the Great Plains and Rocky Mountains regions.

Hanson became director of the Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum in September, 1974, after the retirement of C. Boone McClure. He earned his bachelor's and master's degrees at Chadron State College in Nebraska, and his doctorate in history at the University of Wyoming.

Letter

A thank you to WTSU fraternity

Dear Editor:

I would like to give a big "THANK YOU" to the members of Alpha Tau Omega for cleaning up the debris around the elementary school; while city, state highway and school officials bickered about whose duty it was to clean it up.

However, the point is not whose duty it is to clean up a trash filled school yard, rather whose duty it is to prevent such a thing from happening in the first place . . . And that duty lies with the careless residents of Canyon. In every alley there are overturned garbage cans because the owner has failed to fasten them down and provide a tight lid. Garbage and trash is strewn about waiting for the wind to blow it onto the neighbors yards, catch in the weeds of vacant lots, litter the park, ball diamonds and fill the school yard.

We have tried to prevent such happenings with our own trash, and I am sure there are others who have also taken preventative measures. But on windy days when the trash and even garbage cans go flying by, I get the feeling we are outnumbered. Our own city pickup trucks don't stop to pick up trash that has blown from, or bounced off their trucks. They leave it lie in the alley or street to blow away . . . probably ending up in the school yard.

It is against the law to litter a highway . . . it should be against the law to litter a city. City Hall should see that there are enforced rules about littering and caring for garbage cans, etc. Each and every resident and business in Canyon should make a special effort to see that our city is no longer filled with litter and garbage, eliminating this ridiculous situation.

Mrs. George Kopczynski

Thanks to citizens

Dear Friends:

We deeply appreciate all of your warm-hearted support in the current effort to raise funds for the medical expenses of Ricky Valdez.

I am sure your kindness and thoughtfulness will enable the Valdez family to meet the days ahead with renewed faith in their fellowman, and a deep gratefulness to God for your help in smoothing over these troublesome times.

With deep appreciation,

Eagles Take First Win From Demons, 14-3

Canyon's Eagles stalled the Dumas Demons for four quarters Friday night and waited until the final period to launch their own offensive blitzkrieg to take home their first win of the season and a victory in their first district game.

The Eagles tromped the Demons 14-3 before a large hometown crowd in Kimbrough Stadium to begin district action.

After a series of losses to AAAA schools, the Eagles showed their new-found spunk, garnered in last weekend's tie with state-ranked Palo Duro, to hold Dumas to only two first downs and a total of only 41 yards on offense.

Canyon was well-tuned to play a defensive ballgame the style of which Friday night's outing proved to be.

Neither team was able to effect a powerful offensive strike when needed.

Seven minutes were gone from the first period before either team made a first down, with Dumas garnering a first on a quarterback sneak with 5:03 remaining on the clock. But, the Demons were stalled four plays later and forced to punt.

Late in the quarter, Canyon foiled itself by fumbling twice on second down plays, the second of which handed the Demons their only score of the night.

As the second quarter started, Dumas took over the ball after Quarterback Allen Shankles fumbled on the Canyon 12.

Even with the good field position, though, the Demons couldn't take the ball into the Eagle secondary and were forced to kick a field goal from the six-yard stripe.

Canyon got its first first down of the night on the ensuing series of downs but were foiled again by the Dumas defenders and forced to punt on a fourth and 24 situation.

Ricky Cooper tried to heave the ball into the air but it was blocked and the Demons had the ball on the Canyon 41 with seven minutes left in the first half.

The Eagles' first good drive of the night got underway after the Demons were forced to punt on their next series, as Shankles engineered the kind of ground drive which put the Eagles on the scoreboard three times against Palo Duro.

Making four first downs in 12 plays, the Eagles moved from their own 22 only to the 47 with much of their progress in reverse rather than forward. They played the series out when Cooper was caught for a 15-yard loss on the 47.

The Eagles were plagued by fumbles in the second half, also, but managed to maintain control of the game.

Canyon threatened to score late in the third stanza, but a Jonathan Hull fumble at the Dumas seven stopped the drive short.

The fourth quarter began with Dumas deep in its own territory, and forced to punt on a third down situation to avoid eating the ball in the Demon end zone.

With 11:04 remaining in the game, Cooper tucked the ball under his arm on a first down play, scooted through the right side of the Demon line, then cut back to the left and headed upfield untouched for a 43-yard touchdown run.

Cooper kicked the extra point to give the Eagles a 7-3 edge.

After an exchange of the ball twice, the Eagles mounted another drive, taking possession at the 42 and moving upfield with Joe Luquette, Kenny Basinger and Robert Scott in the backfield.

Luquette took the ball over the right side of the line from the nine to the one for an eight-yard gain and then with 2:47 left in the game, Luquette took the ball on the same play for the final Eagle score. Cooper's kick made it 14-3.

Canyon led in first downs by 15 to 2 for the Demons and in total yards rushing with 198 compared to 41 for Dumas.

Cooper connected on four of 10 pass attempts for 44 yards.

Dumas' quarterback tried the air 10 times and didn't complete one pass.

Leading Eagle groundgainer was Gary Ward with 58 yards in 12 carries, followed by Scott with 23 yards in six carries and Luquette with 22 yards in five carries.

Dumas was paced by Curtis McCandless with 22 yards in four carries.

Next week the Eagles take a breather before taking on their second district foe, Perryton, the following weekend in Perryton.

WTSU AAUP President Says University Promotion Policy Wrong

The president of the small but vocal American Association of University Professors chapter at West Texas State University was given the go-ahead Thursday to begin an investigation into WTSU promotion policies which, if he's successful, might result in the formal censure of the administration by the national AAUP.

Fred Marsh, a professor of government at the university, said he will begin a "review of the cases that have come up and see if the university is operating outside (AAUP) guidelines in such a way they could result in censureship of the administration."

Marsh referred to AAUP national standards for academic freedom for college professors in blasting the current system of selecting faculty members for promotion and tenure at the university.

Other faculty members on the campus have also expressed concern about the method of selecting those for promotion and tenure and one school of the university voted last week to abolish the current university-wide promotion and tenure committee.

The faculty council of the university established Friday a subcommittee to investigate the promotion and tenure procedure, to review faculty complaints, and to make recommendations for change in the policy.

Faculty members have complained in recent weeks about the weight given in the university committee to student evaluation of faculty, and about the university committee's ignoring of school or college committee recommendations.

Marsh attacked the current policy on other grounds Friday, saying the policy is obscure and has failed to work in the manner it was originally billed to work.

Dr. Ray A. Malzahn, academic vice president and chairman of the promotions and tenure committee, admitted "there was a communications problem (between the university committee and school committees), and this raises the question as to the validity of the entire proceeding," Marsh charged.

Marsh said he is concerned about the affects of the current promotion policy on academic freedom.

"I don't maintain everybody can be promoted," he said, "but the promotion procedure as it exists fails to locate responsibility for the actions taken.

"The person who does not get promoted can't find out why he was not promoted or even what it takes to get promoted. Neither the academic vice president, the president nor the regents can tell you what you need to do to get promoted. It's up to a committee to decide and they don't keep records and it leaves one with no information on why he was passed over."

Marsh termed the present promotion system "an abdication of executive responsibility," and said in some ways a system used formerly was better, a system which included only administrators in the decision-making process.

"It was better because the person seeking a promotion could talk to those concerned and know why he was not promoted or be given some indication of what his promotion chances really were," Marsh said.

Not that Marsh advocates a return to that system.

"No system is perfect, for sure" he said. "But the worst of all possible systems is one where the responsibility and accountability are dispersed and where there is an apparent preference for it to be dispersed. It permits buck-passing."

Board. . .

"They have certainly made us justify the new programs we have to offer. I believe if the institution can justify the need for a building or a program, then it will get a fair and favorable hearing."

Watkins said the new powers of the board may call on the university to increase its internal workload to meet the demands for program or construction justification.

Dr. Ray A. Malzahn, academic vice president at WTSU, agrees with Watkins that the new power of the board is a visible manifestation of the move toward greater accountability in university programs and procedures.

"As higher education becomes more expensive, the legislature and the public will be even more concerned with the whole concept of accountability in higher education," he said.

Malzahn said the new board powers will cause more work for his staff.

"It may make implementing of new courses and new programs a more lengthy process or more time-consuming process," he said.

courthouse.

Only J. Ernest Stroud, then mayor of Amarillo, voted against the proposition at that time. Stroud is listed as one of the plaintiffs in the suit filed Thursday.

Since its inception, the PRPC, formed as a review agency for federal funding for the 26-county Panhandle area, has been attacked publicly by Todd and others.

Todd called on Randall County commissioners a year ago to repudiate membership in the organization and seek a state investigation of the commission.

He has also spoken against regional planning commissions in other parts of the state.

Randall County and the City of Canyon pay each year a per capita dues fee to the PRPC. The funding is based on the population of each governmental entity.

Besides the defendants in the case, the PRPC includes in its membership various other governmental units, including the Palo Duro Soil and Water Conservation District of Randall County. Other towns, counties and school districts are also members of the body.

Todd is joined in the suit by Cleatus E. Hyatt, I.C. Phillips, Wanda Casias, M.H. Dwight, Bryan L. Denson, and Stroud all of Amarillo; Fletcher Sims Jr. of Canyon; Albert Johnson of Farwell, Carl Martin of Shamrock, John S. Skelly Jr. of Pampa, Weslie B. Owen of Hereford, Florence Traweek of Hereford, Clarence Morris of Perryton, Gus O. Birdwell of Spearman, and Raymond Jarvis of Borger.

Several of the plaintiffs are well known to Randall County officials. M.H. Dwight is developer of McCormick Estates in north Randall County and had a six-month battle with county commissioners over road paving in his area. Wanda Casias is wife of John Casias, who has been chairman of the Randall County American Party. Sims, a world-known specialist in organic farming, protested vigorously in 1969 when the PRPC was formed.

Council . . .

In addition, the council voted to poll the faculty following the subcommittee's report, on whether the current promotion and tenure policy should be continued, scrapped or changed significantly.

The promotion and tenure procedures used last spring have drawn widespread fire both from the council and from faculty members in college and school faculty meeting in recent weeks.

Primary complaint center around the criteria used by a university-wide tenure and promotion committee to figure those faculty members who would or would not be promoted or given tenure.

Many faculty members have complained about the use of the student evaluation of faculty by the university committee.

By approving establishment of a subcommittee to study the situation, the faculty council Friday rejected two alternative proposals. One, by Waide, proposed that the faculty be polled immediately on whether the tenure and promotion committee at the university level should be abolished, with each school or college given control over promotion and tenure determinations. The other, proposed by Shelly, would have put off for a year any action on the current policy while establishing a study committee to make recommendations for improving the system.

Lamount Upgrading

Community action to make the main access to Gene Howe School safer got underway Thursday with the first meeting of a citizens' committee formed this week by the Gene Howe PTA.

The group headed by Dr. Nolan Clark includes Harold Knight, the father of a third grader who was seriously injured earlier this year as he walked home from school along heavily-traveled Lamount Street.

Other members of the group are Lloyd Block, Larry Cunningham, Conny Martin and Jan Meier.

At the first meeting, petitions received this week from the Amarillo city government, were distributed to the committee members who will contact the 34 property owners along Lamount Street.

The narrow street, which runs north and south between Hollywood and Ardens is used by approximately 125 children who walk north from Gene Howe School. The street is also the major thoroughfare used by school buses and parents who drive their children to school and area residents are seeking to have the street widened, with curbs, gutters and sidewalks installed.

Lamount Street lies within the Amarillo city limits and city manager John Stiff has advised area residents that the street can be improved if 50 percent of the property owners agree to bear the cost for improvements.

Gene Howe PTA president Karolyn Farmer hopes that information will provide the key to success in the petition effort. Similar petitions circulated three years ago failed to win the approval of enough property owners.

"The committee has divided up into teams of two men each and we're going to contact each property owner and write to the ones out of town," she said. "We want to present our needs and inform them. We hope to include everyone and get them to feel they are a part of this effort and hopefully we'll get some signatures on these petitions."

Curb and guttering costs will run $4.50 a running foot and sidewalks will cost $2 a running foot, Mrs. Farmer said.

One of the property owners is the Canyon Independent School District, with a portion of the Gene Howe campus bordering Lamount Street. Superintendent Jerry Jacobs has already said the school district would agree to pay its share of improvement costs.

Another meeting of the committee is scheduled Thursday and a target date for completion of the petition effort is set Nov. 4, when the committee will meet again. After that, the group plans to meet with the city commissioners and present slides and diagrams on the needs to improve the street.

Should the petition effort fail, the other option open to the group is to document the public hazard they feel is present and ask the commissioners to declare the area a public hazard.

Mrs. Farmer said the committee will work quickly to get the petitions circulated and meet with the commissioners.

"We'll be lucky to get the work on the road done by the beginning of school next year," she said. "That's why we know there is not time for delay on our part now."

Canyon's Churchlife

Dr. Roy McClung, president of Wayland Baptist College in Plainview, will conduct worship services today at the First Baptist Church of Canyon. He will speak in the absence of Rev. Jim Hancock, who is conducting a revival at Ozona, Tex.

"World Hunger" is the title of a film to be shown at First Christian Church forum session at 9:45 a.m. today.

"Membership Is For Mission" is the title for the morning sermon of First Presbyterian Church of Canyon today at 10 a.m.

First Baptist Church has converted their YAB (Youth Activities Building) into a Sunday School meeting place for the college youth and are presently seeking a building suitable to be used as the YAB elsewhere.

Jim Brown has been conducting several worship services for Calvary Baptist Church in Canyon this week in view of a call as the local church's pastor. The church will vote following regular Sunday morning worship services today. Mr. Brown, 47, is presently with First Baptist Church of Chattanooga, Okla. He and his wife, Polly, have three children and have been serving at Chattanooga for five years.

Among those church groups making West Texas State University students "feel at home" are the Women's Groups of the First United Methodist Church here as they provide a special "bake and take" service for birthdays and special occasions. Letters describing the service are sent to parents of Methodist students, although the service is not limited only to those students. The women of the church take orders for homemade cakes, cookies and other items which are then delivered to the student on the special date.

School Board To Decide On Appeal Of State Decision

Canyon school board members are expected to decide Tuesday night whether to appeal a Texas Education Commissioner ruling upholding a decision to allow Amarillo to annex 160 acres of land in South Amarillo.

Supt. Jerry Jacobs said he anticipates a decision on whether an appeal will be filed with the Texas Board of Education.

The school district's attorney, Elton Cox of Canyon, said last week he will recommend the board not pursue an appeal of the education commissioner's decision.

The education commissioner ruled earlier this month that a decision by the Randall County Board of School Trustees made in October 1974 be upheld. That decision was to allow 160 acres of CISD land to be annexed by the Amarillo school district.

In other business scheduled on the board's agenda Tuesday, members will review recommendations made by two citizens advisory committees concerning the construction of new schools in the district.

Discussion will also center on a proposed bond election, tentatively scheduled in December, to allow voters to decide whether between $5 and $6 million in bonds should be issued for construction of a new high school and a new elementary school in the north part of the district.

Following the regular meeting, board members will go into executive session to discuss the acquisition of land in the north part of the district for use as an elementary school site.

Board To Seek Guidelines

The city parks and recreation board will ask for guidelines from the city commissioners before they start making any plans for new park facilities.

Chairman George Ritter explained at a parks meeting Thursday that the board could follow several courses: They could develop a master park plan to be funded at one time or they could plan a step-by-step approach in development and funding. They could emphasize central park development or neighborhood playgrounds.

"We need to know the commissioners thinking on this and find out what we can expect in funding, before we come up with a plan that might not be in line with their expectations at all," Ritter said.

Funding requests need to be made by early December, he said.

The board will meet with the city commissioners Monday night.

In the brief meeting Thursday afternoon, final organizational details were settled. The by-laws were adopted and the terms of office were set to begin and expire on Sept. 30. The regular meeting date was fixed as the second Thursday of the month at 3 p.m.

Watercolors On Display At Campus Museum

More than 40 of the American Watercolor Society's top paintings will be on exhibit from Oct. 19 through Nov. 9 at the Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum in Canyon.

"For anyone working with watercolors, this is a great opportunity to see a variety of techniques done by some of the top watercolorists in the United States," says Mrs. Olive Bugbee, museum curator of art.

"Watercolor is probably the most popular art media in the Panhandle now," says David Rindlisbacher, WTSU assistant professor of art. "In this exhibition, we will see works of artists who have national and international reputations. They are the experimenters who are really pioneering in the watercolor media."

The museum is one of only 14 places where this year's AWS framed exhibition is being displayed. The showing will be concurrent with Museum Week, which opens Oct. 25 with the Bicentennial Ball and the dedication of the T-Anchor ranch house.

It includes works by John C. Pellew, who was the artist-in-residence at West Texas State University last year. Pellew joined Edmond J. Fitzgerald, AWS active honorary president, and Hardie Gramatky on the AWS jury of awards.

The society believes that America has the strongest school of watercolor painters in the world, and credits its popularity to American artists Winslow Homer and John Singer Sargent.

Every year since 1955, AWS has sent out two groups of 50 paintings on tour. All the works are for sale, and no painting is sent on tour a second year.

The exhibition will be on display in the museum's north art gallery from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. weekdays and Saturday, and from 2 to 4 p.m. Sundays.

JH Students Raise $2,000

Canyon Junior High School cyclethon riders in the recent fund effort of the Randall County Chapter of the American Heart Association raised in excess of $2,000.

A.J. LuQuette, vice chairman of the chapter, commended the youthful bike riders for their effort. He presented a program and film about heart conditions for the students previous to the cyclethon effort.

Health teacher, Duane Chapman, sought pledges and rode in the cyclethon to raise over $200 himself. Several of the junior high students in the cyclethon effort had pledges in excess of $200 also and Bonham Junior High teachers raised an additional $200 in funds at the event.

LuQuette reminded all participants in the cyclethon to have their pledge money collected and turned in by Monday, November 3.

Top money collectors from the cyclethon will receive prizes during the Muleshoe-Canyon football game on Nov. 7. Prizes will include a CB radio, two bicycles, and a 100 pound beef package.

The ninth grade teams travel Thursday with the white team playing in Bushland and the purple playing LaPlata.

List Bikes, Police Urge

A jump in the number of bicycle thefts throughout the city has prompted Canyon police to reorganize their bike ownership records and to urge the registration with the police department of all bikes.

Nine bicycles have been stolen here in recent weeks, although most have been recovered. Two bikes stolen Wednesday have been returned. A bike belonging to Merritt Vaughn of 2409 10th Ave. was reported missing from Rex Reeves Elementary School Wednesday afternoon and a 10-speed owned by Kyle Hunt of 514 12th Ave. was reported taken from the sidewalk near 1004 8th Ave. later that evening.

City police are updating the some 600 bike registrations on file to make the list easier to work with. Bike owners are urged to register serial numbers and make of their bikes with the police to provide a record in case the bike is stolen.

"Jack-O-Lantern" Time Almost Here -- But Save Seeds

Jack-o-lanterns need not disappear to the trash can or garbage disposal when the goblins have gone from the door on Halloween!

Save that pumpkin to use for pies just as you would unseasoned pumpkin readi-canned at the grocers. For best results carve the pumpkin and scoop out the pithy portion and seeds on Halloween day, then refrigerate "jack" after displaying for that special evening.

The next day cut "jack" in half and bake or steam until tender. Trim away the rind and mash the pulp to use in recipes as you would the unseasoned pumpkin. Two cups will make a well-filled 9 inch pie, and the remainder may be frozen for enjoyment at Thanksgiving or Christmas as pumpkin pies, breads and other desserts.

Another idea for budget minded homemakers is to save those pumpkin seeds — they're delicious themselves too!

Separate the pumpkin seeds from the stringy portion and spread thinly in a shallow pan adding 1-Tp. butter, margarine or oil per cup of seeds.

Now roast the pumpkin seeds in a 250 degree oven for 20-30 minutes, until browned and crisp, stirring occasionally. While seeds are still warm, sprinkle with salt and serve instead of nuts at your next social event.

Or rather than roasting those pumpkin seeds — might allow a few to cure out for planting next year's pumpkin patch. And if a new neighbor moves in with little folks while that patch is growning abundantly next summer, make friends with the little ones by having them select their own pumpkin in the patch for next season's "jack-o-lantern."

American Reflections Bi-Centennial Ball Grand Opening For Museum Week Activities

An entertaining "look at the past" will be offered to local and area residents as the Pioneer Village of the Panhandle Plains Historical Museum "comes alive" Saturday night, October 25.

The "American Reflections" bi-centennial ball there next Saturday evening will begin at 8 p.m. and is a kick-off for the observance of "Museum Week" here. Earlier in the afternoon (at 4 p.m.) dedication rites for the newly located T-Anchor Ranch Headquarters will be conducted at its new home just north of the Museum Annex.

Planned as a fun evening for all, the bi-centennial ball tickets are available at $10 per couple, or $5 for individuals and may be reserved by calling the West Texas State University Director of Development's Office at 656-2331 or 655-2470.

The bi-centennial ball is being sponsored by the WTSU Advisory Council on Campus Enhancement, the Panhandle-Plains Historical Society and the Randall County-Canyon Bicentennial Committee. General chairmen include: Mrs. Lloyd I. Watkins, Mrs. Franklin W. Daugherty, Mrs. Charles M. Smallwood, Joseph H. Pool, Dr. Duane F. Guy and Dr. James A. Hanson.

David Ritter's Combo will furnish music for dancing in Pioneer Hall throughout the evening as guests are entertained with refreshments from the chuckwagon (on the first floor) and at a Victorian tea table (on the second floor). Special personal photographs can be made during the evening with a photographer from Britain Studio available for the occasion.

Although attire is on an optional basis and no formal entries are required, a costume contest has been arranged by the entertainment committee with Mrs. Keith Winter and Mrs. Lloyd I. Watkins as co-chairmen. Participants are encouraged to dress in fashions of the past as an informal individual judging will be conducted during the evening.

Categories to be judged include Heirloom Attire, Panhandle Frontier Days, Authentic Copies, and Best Overall Bicentennial Theme. Judges will be Mr. and Mrs. William A. Moore, Dr. Ples Harper, Mrs. Royal Brantley, Mrs. Olive Bugbee and Mrs. B. Raymond Evans. Those persons wearing Heirloom costumes that evening have been asked to contact Mrs. Patrick Kelso, 655-7516, early this week so that recognition ribbons will be ready at the door.

While the Pioneer Village is "alive" from 8:30 until 10 p.m. several special exhibits are planned including a demonstration of muzzle loading by Al W. Hill, national president of the Muzzle Loading Rifle Association, and an authentic demonstration of square dancing by the Canyon Capers Square Dance Club from Canyon.

The Lecture Gallery on the museum's second floor will offer special Reader's Theatre presentations under the direction of Dr. Zell Sorelle at 8:30, 9:30 and 10:30 p.m. Readers in the group including university students: Cloetta Berge, Lou Ann Fulcher, Melody Brown, Richard Birkenfeld, Ann Shofner, Joe Sherrod and Noreen Klaman.

Heading committee assignments for the total project this fall were Mrs. Lloyd I. Watkins and Mrs. Keith Winter, music and entertainment; Mrs. J. Pat Stephens and Mrs. Joseph H. Pool, Pioneer Village special exhibits; Mrs. Robert P. Muir and Mrs. Frank M. Blackburn, invitations and tickets; Mrs. George B. Thomas with Tierra Blanca chapter of National Secretaries Association, programs; and Mrs. Jack Taylor and Mrs. David Wheeler, decorations and lighting.

Consultants for general planning of the event were Mrs. Leonard Wilson and Mrs. Ples Harper.

Throughout the evening members of the WTSU Campus Services Organization will be "minding the store" as guests are entertained with a real "evening from the past."

Other events planned at the museum during the following week will include a quilt and coverlet display, a Veteran's Day display, an exhibit from the National Watercolor Society, and a presentation of "past fashions" on November 1 at 2:30 p.m.

Candlelight Ceremonies Read For Kuhlman-Tebeck

Mrs. Thomas Richard Tebeck
nee Cindy Kuhlman

Miss Cynthia Lou Kuhlman and Thomas Richard Tebeck were married Saturday evening, October 11, at St. Paul Lutheran Church in Canyon.

Rev. Samuel Nafzger officiated at the double ring marriage rites which were confirmed for the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert F. Kuhlman of Rt. 2, Canyon and the son of Mr. and Mrs. R.W. Tebeck of Burbank, Washington.

The candlelit ceremony featured music by vocalist, Gene Vaughan Morrison, who presented O Perfect Love and The Wedding Prayer. The sanctuary aisles were lined with baby blue candles in candelabrum with matching spiral candelabra framing the altar. Baby blue streamers and greenery decorated each holder and a large bouquet at the altar was arranged of large white mums and baby blue carnations.

Presented in marriage by her father, the bride wore an antique white empire styled wedding dress with a long train. The dress featured bell shaped sleeves accented with flowerettes made of pearls to complement the antique white lace. Matching designs accented the front of the dress and the wedding train. Her shoulder length wedding veil was attached to a Juliet styled wedding cap and she carried a bouquet of baby white roses with blue streamers.

Bridesmatron was Mrs. Mike Kuhlman and the maid of honor was Miss Suzanne Fulton. Both bridal attendants wore matching long dresses of baby blue shimmer crepe trimmed with navy at the neckline and sleeves. Large white mums, accented with blue streamers, were carried by the bridal attendants.

Nicci Kuhlman, niece of the bride, served as flowergirl. She carried a white basket filled with red rose petals and wore a formal length empire styled dress of blue shimmer crepe with white lace accents at the bodice, sleeves and neckline.

Thomas M. Belew of Amarillo was best man and the bride's brother, Gary Kuhlman, served as groomsman.

Ushering were Mike Kuhlman of Canyon, a brother of the bride, Charles Higgs of Amarillo and Lyn Lockhart of Canyon.

Double Ring Nuptials Read

Double ring nuptial vows uniting Miss Kyle Pauline Buford of Canyon and Terry James Vogel of Camp Pendleton, Calif. were confirmed in ceremonies Oct. 7 at St. Joseph's Catholic Church in Amarillo.

Rev. Father Richard MacClellan officiated at the ceremonies which united the daughter of Gene Buford and the late Pauline Buford of 805 6th Ave., Canyon with the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Vogel of 3519 Kileen, Amarillo.

Altar baskets of white and pink gladioli with white and pink chrysanthemums decorated the sanctuary and candelabrum bearing pink candles with pink satin ribbons flanked each side of the altar.

Mrs. Lynn Crabtree, organist, played and the soloist, Larry Brown, sang Because and The Wedding Prayer.

Mrs. Lyle Denny, sister of the bride, served as matron of honor and wore a pink and white gown as she carried a bouquet of pink minature carnations and star flowers on a lace fan. Her daughter, Nickie Denny, served as the flower girl. Presiding at the wedding register was Miss Cindy Loven.

Robert Duane Vogel, brother of the bridegroom, served as best man. Ushering were Larry Vaughan of Canyon and Leon Bichsel of Amarillo.

Presented in marriage by her brother-in-law, Lyle Denny, the bride chose a formal floor length wedding gown of Chantilly lace over bridal taffeta designed with a high neckline, empire waist and long bell sleeves with a wide cuff. Tiny sequins enhanced the neckline and a wide ruffle of Chantilly lace complemented the hemline. Her Mantilla veil of imported illusion was bordered with matching lace and cascaded from a lace coif ending in a sweeping Chapel length train. She carried a crescent bouquet of stephanotis, pink roses and a white cateya orchid.

The marriage was followed with a reception at the home of the groom's parents where the four-tiered wedding cake was decorated with pink and white and featured matching doves holding rings. Mrs. Frank Zabcik cut the cake, Mrs. Georgia Potts poured punch and Mrs. Jim Sands served guests. The table was decorated with the bride's bouquet and baskets of pink and white gladioli with pink and white daisy arrangements accenting the reception room. Mrs. Lynn Crabtree entertained during the reception with music at the organ.

After the reception, the newlyweds departed on a trip to the Painted Desert, the Grand Canyon and Las Vegas, Nevada. They will establish their home at 370 Walnut in Carlsbad, Calif. after Oct. 15.

The bride attended Canyon High School and the bridegroom, a graduate of Missouri Military Academy, attended West Texas State University. He is presently serving with the United States Marine Corps.

Out-of-town guests registered for the wedding and reception were Mr. and Mrs. Art Tollefson of Edmore, North Dakota, grandparents of the bridegroom, and Mr. and Mrs. Donald Tollefson, also of Edmore, North Dakota.

Campus Chapel Nuptial Scene

Joseph A. Hill Memorial Chapel on the campus of West Texas State University was the site of a double ring marriage ceremony performed Saturday, Oct. 11, which united Miss Cynthia Gay Mickey and Colin Keith Robinson in marriage.

Miss Mickey is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C.W. Mickey of Tulia and granddaughter of A.R. Mickey of Canyon. The bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Keith Robinson of Columbus, Indiana.

Officiating minister was the bride's father and marriage vows were exchanged before an altar framed with three seven-branched candelabra holding burnt orange tapers and decorated with burnt orange satin bows.

Arrangements of large bronze mums and mixed fall mums were used at the altar with large white urns standing on white columns filled with companion arrangements complementing the setting with accents of fall oak leaves. Clusters of large fall mums and burnt orange satin bows marked the mother's pews and a traditional white aisle runner was used.

Mrs. Carolyn Kite of Canyon was organist and accompanied herself as she sang, Whither Thou Goest. Lohengrin's Bridal Chorus by Wagner was the processional and Mendelssohn's Wedding March, the recessional.

Presented in marriage by her brother, David Mickey of Amarillo, the bride wore a formal gown of candlelight silk crystal organza, trimmed in imported French lace, with bishop sleeves. The full skirt was trimmed in French lace and a wide ruffle sweep to a chapel length train. The long chapel length veil was trimmed in wide French lace attached to a Juliet caplet of all lace. She carried a cascade arrangement of golden waves roses with baby's breath and pearl clusters and candlelight satin streamers tied with love knots.

Matron of honor was the bride's sister-in-law, Mrs. David Mickey of Amarillo. Her gown was an apricot jersey straight floor length skirt with a fitted bodice. The sleeves were long with flounce ruffles at the shoulders. Her picture hat was pale apricot with burnt orange and yellow streamers. She carried a cascade arrangement of mixed fall pom pom mums in burnt orange and bronze.

The flower girl, Lisa Woods of Amarillo, a cousin of the bride, wore a floor length peasant style dress. Her picture hat and basket of flowers matched those carried by the matron of honor.

Mickey Charles Ely of Canyon, cousin of the bride, served as best man. Keenan Robinson, brother of the groom, was ring bearer.

Guests were seated by Quentin Ely, cousin of the bride, and Billy Holland, both of Canyon.

The bride's mother chose a floor length dress of muted browns. The groom's mother wore a floor length gown in shades of burnt orange and brown. Their corsages were mixed fall colors.

Following the ceremony the wedding party greeted guests at the reception in Cousins Hall. The house party included Mrs. Randy Johnson and Mrs. Jerry Woods of Amarillo, Mrs. Fred Ely of Canyon, Mrs. Cecil Evans of Tulia and Mrs. Cecil Tobias of Columbus, Ind. The bridal table was decorated with a yellow-bronze linen table cloth trimmed in lace with the altar arrangements surrounded by the attendants bouquets. The three tiered wedding cake was decorated with flowers in the bride's colors and sugar bells.

For the wedding trip to Indiana the bride chose a blue and brown pant suit with brown accessories. Her corsage was the yellow rose boutonniere worn by the groom. After Oct. 27th they will be at home in Tulia at 300 A South Maxwell.

Out of town relatives included Mr. and Mrs. Keith Robinson, Mrs. Cecil Tobias and Jeff, and Mrs. Edith Clark, all of Columbus, Ind; Mr. and Mrs. Earl Monteith and Dianne of El Paso; Mr. and Mrs. W.F. Gilbert, Tami and Candi Cook and Mr. and Mrs. Jim Gilbert, Kenny, De Lynn, and Mike of Plainview.

Merlin the Magician
on how to solve your heating problem

"Those drafty old castles are notorious even today for being dreadfully hot in summer and frigidly cold in winter. We didn't have the heat pump in those days, of course. I think what I like best about the heat pump is its simplicity. One unit provides heating and cooling . . . complete comfort in any kind of weather with one setting of the thermostat. And the heat pump is environmentally-sound . . . when heating, it actually provides more energy than it uses. Yes, if I'd had a heat pump, I wouldn't have been so cranky about passing on my magic secrets . . ."

Food Allergy Signals

By BECKY HALL
County Extension Agent

Food allergies can have several warning signals — and causes.

Reactions such as headache, nausea, swelling, itching or burning indicate a possible food allergy.

These 'sensitivities' may occur because the food substance (called an allergen) contains some protein. But some researchers believe that starches, fats and other chemicals may produce the reaction.

Although any food may produce reactions in some individuals, the most common offenders are eggs, milk, wheat, corn, chocolate, potatoes, fish, shellfish, tomatoes, and citrus fruit such as oranges, grapefruits or lemons.

One cause of a food sensitivity may be eating too much of that particular item. This is why it's unwise to follow fad diets calling for an excess of any one food.

And frequently people who 'just don't like' certain foods really may be allergic to them. Nature's protective effort may be misinterpreted as just a whim or fancy — such as the preschooler who refuses to drink his milk.

Or a teenager may be fully aware that when he eats chocolate he has a reaction such as a stomach ache, headache or bad skin condition.

Any food giving mild symptoms should be placed on the suspect list.

If family members seem sensitive to certain foods, the family physician or a specialist in allergic disease, can identify the exact allergies and prescribe the proper treatment.

Because nutritional needs of an allergic person are the same as anyone else's, physicians usually recommend a diet based on the Four Food Groups — but individually modified to the person's allergies.

Remember to read prepared food labels carefully to see that the offending substance isn't contained. Foods causing an allergic reaction should be omitted.

For diets excluding wheat and milk, a suggested recipe of peanut butter cookies for snacking follows:

Peanut Butter Cookies
(5 dozen cookies)

½ cup shortening

The Kitchen Sink

By SUSAN WILSON

The cloud you see rising from my house is not smoke — it's sawdust.

Our remodeling effort has been underway for a little over a week now and what a wonderful week it's been. Remodeling can be a real pain in the backporch, if you know what I mean.

On the first day, Tuesday, everything was moved off the back porch, including the washer, dryer and freezer. They sit forlornly in my backyard, with an extension cord plugged in next door to keep my freezer alive. I have no laundry facilities, though.

The workmen ripped up the porch floor, and the walls. Then, they left.

A few days later the plumber came. He cut off the water at the same time the electrician turned off the lights.

Cooking supper that night was a thrill. I stepped out my back door, straddled the 2 x 4's to the backyard, got a pound of hamburger out of the freezer, squeezed past the refrigerator, which has been pushed up next to the stove, and made warm tomato paste and ground meat to go over dry spaghetti. We cooked and ate in darkness and no one could really see me well enough to commit mayhem.

The plumber set in the drain for the new toilet and the toddler plugged it up with a piece of wood. She found a round piece that fit perfect, nice and snug. The plumber vows he loves kids.

I have very good workmen, and they are doing a great job. But several things puzzle me:

Why do workmen only run power saws, power drills or those loud air-driven nail guns during nap time?

Why do kids get twice as dirty twice as often when the washer is out of commission?

Why do kids get thirsty immediately after the plumber cuts off the water?

Why don't things come complete? I didn't know when you get a shower you only get the shower and you don't get the faucet, or door. Likewise, I didn't know when you bought a toilet you didn't get a seat. Or that when you bought a door you didn't get a knob.

Why does everything make dust? Old brown dust when they're tearing down old walls. White dust when they're putting sheetrock on new walls.

Why does cold fear run through a homeowner's veins when a carpenter, plumber or electrician says "un-oh," or whistles or just stands there shaking his head? (Like when the shower drain is three inches too far back but the floor is already down. Or there is a big pipe in the wall the carpenter was tearing out. Or the electrician points out that I forgot to tell him that I want one plug for the place where my refrigerator is going to eventually sit.)

A couple more weeks of clanging, banging, hammering, sawing, drilling and such and we'll be ready for the finish work.

We had originally planned to panel the master bedroom. But we've decided instead to pad the walls — a perfect inner sanctum for someone whose been through remodeling.

District Council Position For Cooper

Benny R. Cooper of Canyon has been named to the District Council of the Small Business Administration according to an announcement from Thomas S. Kleppe, administrator of the U.S. Small Business Administration.

"Mr. Cooper was selected for council membership in recognition of his knowledge of and interest in the problems of small business," noted Kleppe.

As a member of the district council, Cooper will take part in semi-annual meetings where the needs of the local small business community are discussed and the means by which SBA can most effectively meet these needs are considered. He will be an unpaid director appointed for a two-year term.

The Advisory Council serves as a channel of information to local business and commercial interests regarding specific SBA programs. As an advisory body, the Council makes recommendations concerning the SBA programs and keeps the District Director, Mr. Philip J. O'Jibway, informed of current economic conditions within the 81 West Texas counties which comprise the Lubbock District.

A native of McLean, Cooper is owner of Cooper's Market of Canyon, Inc. He and his wife, Marjo, have three sons, Gary, Randy and Kendall and make their home at 1116 Hillcrest in Canyon.

Active in the community, Cooper is a past chairman for the local Crusade for Cancer, is a past president of the Canyon Kiwanis Club, and is an active member of the Canyon Chamber of Commerce.

He is on the board for Affiliated Foods of Amarillo, and on the board of directors for the Thriftway Advertising Group. A deacon of the First Baptist Church of Canyon, Cooper also serves at the Sunday School Director for the church.

Student Scholarships

Six West Texas State University ROTC students received $50 scholarships from the Military Science Dept. in ceremonies in early October.

These students were named from a group of 50 applicants for their interest and participation in ROTC. Presenting the checks was WTSU professor of military science Lt. Col. Charles Laakso.

Receiving the scholarships were Patricia Althen of 2104 N. Roosevelt, Amarillo; Justin Miller of Woodbridge, Va.; Estelita Balderrama of Kress; Richard St. John of the Canal Zone; James Wharton, of Merkel; and Muriel Clack of Universal City.

Joan of Arc crusades for her cause in the Canyon High School production of "The Lark" to be staged Tuesday at 8 p.m. in the CHS auditorium. Janet Malzahn appears as St. Joan while (from the left) David Coronado plays Cauchon; Allen Shankles is Warwick; Jerry Paul Allen is King Charles and Phil Barnes is the Inquisitor. Admission for students and adults is $1.

ALT Donates Dresses To Museum

Amarillo Little Theatre Costume Shoppe's donation of more than 40 dresses and uniforms to the Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum will provide a monumental challenge for museum secretary Jackie Wilson.

She expects to spend more than 2,000 hours of her own time putting the clothing back into good shape.

"We are in the process of building up our clothing and textile collection," says Museum Director James Hanson. "To give an example of what we've done, we had 12 dresses last year and we now have more than 100."

Most of the museum's clothing impetus is due to Mrs. Wilson, who was a clothing and textiles major at Texas Tech University before she married Dr. Leonard Wilson, West Texas State University associate professor of plant science.

"I felt it should be done," she says, "I couldn't sit by and let them rot away. It is an opportunity that no one else wanted."

Mrs. Wilson has already spent 1,000 hours over a period of five months sewing the six uniforms now displayed in the museum's front room.

A primary part of the clothing donated by the theatre are wedding gowns and 1920s formal wear which it received years ago in a costume drive to bolster their collection. These include several Paris originals, such as an 1890s Worth gown, and early dresses from Dallas stores Sanger Harris and Neiman Marcus.

The goal of the museum, she says, is "to have a complete span of fashions that would be used for study purposes."

And to do this the museum needs as much information as it can get on the history of these dresses from the theatre, she continued.

Mrs. Wilson only knew the basics of clothing restoration when she took the task on last summer. Once she received Hanson's okay to develop the collection, she began talking to the older women in the community, and especially her mother, about how they cared for their clothing when they were young.

She also took time from her European tour earlier this year to visit with the clothing curators of England's Victoria and Albert Museum about their care of their extensive collection.

She came back with some helpful hints, such as using lemon juice, salt and sunlight to remove stains.

But the primary ingredient, she now knows is time.

Student Named To Program

Evans Adkins III, Dallas sophomore, has been selected for participation in the Reserved Officers Training Corps flight program at West Texas State University.

Flying lessons are provided to qualified ROTC students free of cost by the U.S. Army.

Adkins, who previously served in the U.S. Navy for four years, is a pre-veterinarian major and graduated from the Army Ranger School this summer in Ft. Benning, Ga.

He will be eligible for Army aviation training upon his graduation from WTSU and commissioning as a second lieutenant in the U.S. Army.

Adkins is the son of Evans J. Adkins, 2534 Vintage No. 208.

Gensler Back From Meet

Dr. Philip Gensler, professor and head of the West Texas State University Computer Information Systems, attended two board of directors meetings.

He attended the meeting of the Board of Directors of the Institute for Certification of Computer Professionals Oct. 17 and 18 in Chicago. The board is composed of 16 representatives of the eight largest data processing organizations in the US and Canada, Dr. Gensler said.

The board administers tests each spring for the Certificate of Data Processing for those who want to earn it. Members will set the next examination date, accept applications and set guidelines for the test.

Dr. Gensler represented the Association for Educational Data Systems. The Board of Directors meets quarterly.

Dr. Gensler will also attend the state convention for the Texas chapter of AEDS Oct. 26 in Arlington.

He will participate in the Board of Directors meetings and chair a session on the selection of computer terminals for classroom use.

The association meets annually to discuss ideas for the use of computers in education, Dr. Gensler said.

Pilot Program Started In School

A pilot program for the state to help classroom teachers identify and benefit children with learning disabilities is getting underway at Gene Howe Elementary School.

A similar program will begin in January at Rex Reeves.

Dr. Marian T. Giles, professor of education at Texas Tech, held the first class Monday with Gene Howe teachers to begin the first part of the intensive inservice training program she has authored.

Dr. Wilma Jo Bush, acting chairman of education at West Texas State University, is working with Dr. Giles, and teachers will receive three semester hours of graduate credit for the six-week course.

There is a tremendous need for some kind of inservice training for classroom teachers because, year after year, there has been a steady increase of children who don't learn well in school, according to Dr. Giles.

Some authorities estimate that as many as seven to fifteen per cent of the school population may have some kind of learning disability, Dr. Giles said. However, she said she believes that no more than three to five per cent of the underachievers actually have learning disabilities, if the condition is strictly defined.
